Like California’s San Andreas fault-line, David Loenberg likes to shake things up. He applies watercolor paint to paper with splatters, swabs, slaps, splats and slashes. It is added, subtracted, and added again. He floods, blossoms, and textures. His style is about gesture, no-hold-barred expressive color, odd shapes in odd places, soft transparency, and hard opacity. This Golden State artist calls it “California-Vibe Portraiture.” In his three-day workshop, you too will learn how to shake it up starting with David’s method of posing and taking photographs of your subjects to tracing out simple outline contour drawings of their heads and features from the photographs. The drawings are then easily traced onto sheets of watercolor paper from quarter to full sheets size. After that, it’s time to California-Vibe them!

David Lobengers’s water paintings can be found in private, public, and corporation collections across the country. He has had his work published national and internationally in American Artist Magazine, Southwest Art Magazine, American Art Collector Magazine, Plein Aired Magazine, the French art Magazine, Pratique Des Art, and the European magazine, The World of Watercolor.
